CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK - July 12-18

This year marks the 11th observance of Captive Nations Week in the United States a week set aside advantage of sometimes paying a higher price to trade at This year marks the 11th observance of Captive during the administration of the late President Dwight D. home. Eisenhower to proclaim that all people, including those who are forced to live under Soviet domination, "of right ought to be free and independent."

It is difficult to judge, at this time, whether the captive nations are any closer to the goal than they were freedom, and the right of national self-determination. It angles. would appear that the people of Yugoslvaia enjoy a slightly greater degree of "freedom" than those in other captive nations; they can travel beyond the boundaries of the country, and the limited but unmistakably "capitalist" incentives built back into the economy have, predictably, paid off in terms of a better standard of living. But the people are still unable to vote for a candidate of their choice in a free election; and those who have attempted to exercise freedom of speech beyond proscribed limits have been quickly clapped in jail. One suspects that the concessions were not intented to rid the people of communism, but were made as a pragmatic attempt to strengthen the communist state.

As to the other captive nations, their plight is sad. Certainly the people of Czecho - Slovakia are suffering a legree of oppression as great as if not worse than the year they were occupied by the Red Army in 1948. The people of East Prussia, Silesia, and Pomerania are described as existing today "in a living hell." The people of Albania, supposedly "free" from Soviet domination, have the highest death rate from sickness and disease (such as TB) in the world).

Thus, the people of the United States "observe this week with appropriate ceremonies and activities," which we shall continue to do "until such as freedom and nations of the world."

The Colonel said: "Try to deserve the good opinion of the people who think well of you."

Tie-dyeing is an ancient method of fabric design being revived by swinging doit-yourselfers as well as by the country's top designers. It involves tying off sections of fabric with rubber bands or string and dipping the fabric into pots of simmering household dyes. Patterns of color are formed because the dyes do not penetrate the tied areas.

Here's how: Start with inexpensive white or pale pantyhose. Supplies needed are Rit dve in powder or liquid form, a stock of rub ber bands, wooden spoon for stirring dye bath, rubber gloves and a glass, metal or enamel pan large enough to completely immerse the gar

Wet down the tights or pantyhose, fold in half, lengthwise. Working on a flat surface, band a series of closely-spaced rosette knots over the entire surface of the tights. Perhaps some day better education, in all of its aspects, the home, the school, the church, every individual or agency that affects people can, working together throughout the world, eliminate the senseless and destructive wars that seem

State Comptroller John Vaughn, said this week that he thought the state treasury would about $3 million short in inancing the $234 million which he legislature finally voted to Missouri's schools next year. It would have required $269 million to have funded the new foundation program which the General Assembly originally legislated, but the defeat of Proposition No. 1, the State, Corporate and Individual Income Tax Revision Bill, eliminated that possibility. Actually if Vaughn is correct, and who should know better than the comptroller, we will get even less money than we did last To provide the same quality of education, in the face of galloping inflation and rising enrollments is, of course, impossible. The children are the losers and at a time when better preparation than ever before is required for them to compete on an even basis with students from states where education assumes a higher priority in the value scale. However, in the face of the problem we have spoken about, there is only one thing to do and that is to enlist all of the resources of the community to do the best job of educating our kids under the circumstances we operate. We will

The Sikeston Jaycee pool obviously is a candidate for one of two solutions: to be closed as a health hazard, or to be temporarily closed and cleaned up!

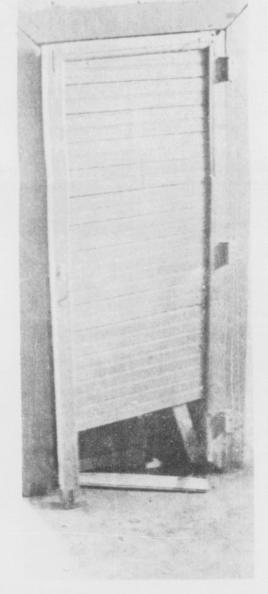

One major problem, aside from its general condition, exists however. It is doubtful the Jaycees have the resources or the desire to clean up their pool since they lose several thousand dollars per year on its operation.

An alternative solution would be for the city to take over the responsibility of the pool, and provide what is needed to give Sikeston residents a sanitary swimming pool.

Legislation would be required to authorize such payments.

Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird has stressed his belief that the nation's nearly one million man guard-reserve structure will become increasingly important in the coming years as the size of U.S. regular forces is cut.

The biggest problem facing the Pentagon in maintaining the strength of the backup forces centers in the Army National Guard and Army reserve.

These elements, totaling some 660,000 men, are filled to a substantial extent now with young men who chose to duck the draft by spending six to 10 months on active duty and the balance of six years in the guard or reserve.

As the draft takes fewer young men, the incentive to sign up in the guard and reserve is diminishing, and a top National Guard official said recently "the days of waiting lists and long backlogs of men waiting to enter the guard appear to be coming to an end. Laird and his manpower aides face a dilemma on how to strengthen the National Guard and reserve without spending more money. The programs now cost about $2.5 billion a year.

The various inducements now being considered to enhance guard-reserve strength would not require additional funds, officials said.

Cambodia Good For Viet Morale

By RAY CROMLEY NEA Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON (NEA) The major pay-off in Cambodia may not be in weapons captured or in President Nixon's show of will, but in a strengthening of the confidence of the average South Viet-namese villager—citizen and militiaman.

This reporter's whole experience with a series of guerrilla wars in the past three decades makes clear that once there is a balance of conventional power, where villagers have the will and the courage to face the guerrillas, and if they have even a minimum of arms, no underground can

There is a certain magic in attack, and a certain very strong defeatism in being always on the defensive. Very few men can go on for years of only defending against an enemy and never advancing to attack, without being overwhelmed by pessimism.

This reporter was on the Cambodian border with a company of South Vietnamese Rangers in 1964, when President Johnson announced air attacks on North Vietnam.

I will never forget the change in the faces of these tough neir captain.

I've been out with the faces of the service of the s infantrymen as the news came through or the words of their captain.

"I've been out with these men for a year." he said, "and we've never seen the enemy. We've been constantly out on patrol. We've been killed from ambush and we've fired back. We've found blood on the ground, so we know we've made hits. But it's hard to go on like this always defending and never attacking. Now we're going to be hitting them

But the attacks on the north stopped.

This reporter has been talking of late with men who have been moving through South Vietnam's rural villages since the attacks began on the Communist Cambodian bases.

It has made a real difference to these country people They bring up Cambodia. They mention what their troops have done there. The enemy is no longer invincible. From all external appearances it has given pride to these people.

This new pride has shown up in the dress and the bearing of the village militiamen, at least in places this reporter's contacts have visited.

It has shown up in the willingness of the villagers to put up a fight, instead of caving in, when attacked by the Viet

Now if this new pride is real, and lasts, and is true in most places in South Vietnam, not just those spots this reporter has reports on, then this is a very significant turn-
